LECTURERS EXPERIENCE

Heike J. Boehme

Qualified attorney, Chief Operating Officer

Teaching hinges on teaching both content and skills. I want my students to develop a holistic approach of addressing corruption risks: to understand the legal bases and to make connections with people, to understand the reasoning for their actions. I share my broad practical experience from a legal advisory and in-house perspective, from the industry and the NGO sector. But good teaching also depends upon intellectual exchange - the interactions with professionals of diverse backgrounds at the IMACC classroom offer exactly that!

Michael Hershman

Co-founder of Transparency International and Chairperson of IACA's International Senior Advisory Board

The International Anti-Corruption Academy once again demonstrates its innovative approach to ethics and good governance by announcing the start of the new master's degree programme in anti-corruption compliance and collective action. The curriculum for this programme is designed for compliance and ethics professionals who want to increase their knowledge in areas such as best practices in compliance, ethics, risk management, internal investigations, and collective action.

Martim Della Valle

Professor of Economic Theory, University of Passau

What impressed me most about the IMACC Program is the ability of its students to be agents of change in their respective countries. I was fortunate enough to lecture in two different modules. At the final module I could see how students had quickly matured and mastered the tools they had learnt in the previous modules. Some had quickly achieved important results: some had been promoted to senior positions, some had made career moves, some had implemented new ideas in their organisations, some had very promising academic projects. In terms of contents, I believe IMACC strikes a very good balance between theory and practice, with in depth content presented by renowned scholars and practitioners.
